Young St. Louisan Probably the most remarkable young man in the United States is Russell E. Gardner of St. Louis, who has just announced publicly that he has enough money and doesn't intend to hustle for more. And this is all the more remarkable since Mr. Gardner is not even a millionaire, and his "pile," to use the vernacular, looks "like 30 cents" when compared to the holdings of Rockefelier or Carnegle. In short, Mr. Gardner ing in fine scenery of interesting hishas amassed a fortune of $250,000 by

Mr. Gardner will not retire from trade, but will simply not try to extend his business. He agreed with himself some time ago that he needed a certain sum for his own income, and any surplus that accrues above that is to be divided among his employees, of whom he has about 350. Mr. Gardner proved his sincerity recently by thus giving away $10,000.

Mr. Gardner says that his purpose now is to shake off care and enjoy life. He was born on the Mississippi river and is in love with the muddy stream. He has bought a yacht and intends to spend much of his time on the river with his wife. He is not going to Euley is good enough for this American.
